The Christchurch Rudolf Steiner School is seeking donations of works of art for an art auction it is holding in association with its traditional Summer Fair to be held at the school on November 24.

The auction is part of a major appeal for funds to enable the school to complete the purchase of land in Christchurch to enable it to build a school on a permanent site. Established four years ago, the school currently rents premises but the school is growing so quickly a permanent site with room for expansion is urgently needed.

Rudolf Steiner schools (there are now four in New Zealand) are non-sectarian and both art and music are an integral part of a curriculum designed to enable children to become fully rounded and developed people. The school is not elitest and turns no children away, offering a dual fee system in which they can elect to pay a fixed termly fee or to pay what they can afford.

While we realise that all recognised artists plan well ahead for exhibitions of their work and for commissioned work we hope members may have something which they would be happy to donate for our auction.

If unable to help, it would be appreciated if you could let others in the world of New Zealand art know our need.

Criticism Evening

ASSOCIATE MEMBERS (those who paint a little and are eligible to exhibit in the Open Exhibition but who have not attained working membership) are invited to bring 3 paintings to the gallery on Tuesday 20th November at 7.30 p.m., when Doris Lusk, Bill Cumming, and Michael Eaton, three councillors on the artists' committee will discuss the work submitted.

We think that this meeting will prove very helpful and that the painters will learn much by hearing what the panel has to say about each work.

We look forward to a good attendance.

Janny Buss

Every year 3000 yards of naked white silk takes on the glowing colours of an Aladdin's cave.

The 5 artists of the FANNY BUSS STUDIO have the magic touch.

The silk, cut into dress pieces is dyed, rinsed and ironed, then printed with handcut wood blocks.

Finally each model dress is made up by an expert dressmaker.

The most popular article produced in the studio is the large hand painted scarf, each one a veritable work of art.

Every dress, skirt, scarf or cravat is individual. The artists are happy to provide transport, should it be needed.

Murals

The C.S.A. Gallery has occasional requests from clients wishing to commission artists to produce murals or large works for the interior and exterior of commercial buildings.

Any artist or craftsperson willing to undertake such work could contact Nola Barron at the gallery and bring photographs of the type of work done.

We would be happy to be able to assist both the client and the artist.

C.S.A. Centennial Research Material Wanted

It would be greatly appreciated if anyone with material pertaining to the history of the Canterbury Society of Arts would be willing to lend the Gallery anything they might consider to be useful.

Old annual exhibition catalogues, notably from the periods 1881 - 1895 and 1945 - 1970, would be especially useful, although newspaper clippings and correspondence relating to the Society would also be of considerable interest. If any descendants of the founding members of the Society could assist with this research could they please contact the Director at the Gallery as soon as possible.

SHONA McFARLANE

exhibitions

Shona McFarlane Retrospective Exhibition Preview 16th November at 8 pm The Exhibition closes 2 Dec

Shona McFarlane is very much a Dunedin artist. She has lived in the city most of her life, and has contributed much to it. Born in Gore, she spent her childhood in Lawrence, moving to Dunedin with her parents when she was ten.

Her career in art began at the Dunedin Teachers College, when she like a number of well known artists today who could not, or were then unable to undertake a full fine arts course, she did a 'third year' in art, a specialist course which produced some of the country's leading art educationalists, artists and craftsmen, among them people like Ralph Hotere, John Drawbridge, Marilyn Webb and Elizabeth Stevens.

After a couple of years in the Maniototo district as an itinerant art teacher, she went to London in 1953, and remained for over four years, teaching in schools for intellectually and physically handicapped by day, and taking evening classes at the Hammersmith School of Art most evenings.

She returned to Dunedin in 1958, and was surprised and excited by the character of the city which she had previously taken for granted. Her output during the years 1958-69 was prodigious, and the paintings and pen drawings from this period are already historic documentation of a city in change.

She had given up teaching and joined the Dunedin Evening Star. Her next twelve years with the paper developed her interest in writing and led to her rather rare combination of talents as writer and painter. Her reporting days also provided her with people and places to paint and produced some of her best genre painting. It also led to more involvement in the community.

She became active in a number of arts organisations, was the first woman to be appointed to the Queen Elizabeth 11 Arts Council, became chairman of its visual arts committee and president of the Dunedin Civic Arts Council. She was awarded the MBE for her services to art and the community in 1973.

Then came a sudden halt to everything. Elizabeth Stevens comments: "In 1972, after surgery for cancer, Shona believed for a while that she would never paint again. Until a grey depressing day when someone brought her some oranges, and she decided without much enthusiasm to paint them. That was the trigger that released her second great burst of creative ability. An apparent misfortune became a catalyst for a complete change of lifestyle. She left The Star and devoted her time to painting.

The following year, 1973, an exhibition of her 'painting and prose' was held in the Shona McFarlane Gallery of the Otago Art Society. Of the exhibition, John Middleditch wrote; "these new works are colourful and dynamic - they have quality of significant form - the aesthetic element that all artists strive for, but few achieve."

Her family have been recurring themes through the years, particularly her mother whom she painted many times.

Shona McFarlane has designed several glass windows, among them the huge 'Rainbow', a window mural for the Manukau City Centre in Auckland which was completed in 1976 and which measures 40ft by 13ft.

She won the 1974 National Bank Art Award with "Sunflower" a glass and perspex panel which hangs in the Dowse Public Art Gallery in Lower Hutt.

David R. Turner

I have been involved with clay approximately, 12 years, constantly being fascinated by the extremes that is malleable material can be pushed to.

The past two years I have done very little clay work partly because I had a full time job and inspiration was low, however in May this year I resigned my position in order to further my career as a potter . . . but the Customs Department was also furthering its career by making hurdles for potters to try and get over. Because I had not been working and confidence was low the hurdle I faced seemed too large to get over - so I have snuck around the side of it.

'I have used the old method of marbling to make these prints. In some I have built up a collage using several different printed papers and in others I have printed one paper several times to build up patterns and textures of great intricacy. In these I have also painted areas with lacquers and enamels.'

New Zealand
presents members and students
major exhibition

6 - 18 December

This group of artists presents a varied selection of styles and presentation, which echos the trend towards photographic decor and photography as an important art form in it's own right.

Christopher Pennington, a professional photographer from Great Britain opened the School in April 1977. This privately owned and operated institution situated in The Arts Centre, Christchurch provides tuition with emphasis on practical learning, in the taking, developing and printing of photography. Courses are available in both Colour and Black and White photography and in the two and half years of operation over 400 students from throughout N.Z., all walks of life and professions have availed themselves of the School's comprehensive facilities.

The aim of the School is to promote a better understanding in the art of photography and students are encouraged to participate in exhibiting their work.

Mr. Sleeman of Rangiora will be displaying with the exhibits some of his comprehensive collection of photographic items and as a combination this exhibition will prove to be different and refreshing.

Facts on gifts and bequests to the CSA

Over the past year we have come across a number of misconceptions regarding duties payable on gifts to such cultural and charitable bodies as the CSA.

These are the facts on gifts made during your lifetime:
All gifts made to the CSA do not attract any payable gift duties whatsoever.

If you are a farmer, businessman, patron of the arts, recipient of a windfall, in the middle of a gifting programme to your family, even paying gift duties on your gifts — you can still give as much as you like to the CSA and:

- the CSA gift will not affect your family gifts in any way;
- the CSA gift will not attract any payable gift duty;
- the CSA gift will be permanently excluded from your estate for estate duty purposes.

These are the facts on bequests:
Bequests in a will to such cultural and charitable bodies as the CSA up to $25,000 receive an exemption from estate duty.
If total charitable bequests in a will exceed $25,000 any excess over $25,000 attracts estate duty.

The secretary would be happy to discuss in complete confidence, any proposals which friends and donors to the Society may have at any time.
