Foreword

BY JOHN WOOD

THE pottery in this Exhibition is a sign of the times.

The Industrial Revolution, with its mechanised mass-production, put an end to many forms of individual skill and craftsmanship which had flourished and matured during thousands of years, producing most of the outstandingly beautiful objects of the world. Pottery was no exception. Two hundred years ago, the brilliant new factory techniques of Josiah Wedgwood and others like him inevitably led to the near-disappearance of the old individual potters and their hand-techniques in all the more highly developed countries of the world, while paving the way for the technically brilliant achievements of the large industrial potteries of today.

Few would deny that the best ceramic wares of the factories of today come remarkably near to technical perfection. They are flaw-lessly smooth and accurate in shape, the quality of their material is superb, and the techniques employed in decorating them are wonderful in their finesse and perfection—yet no-one with any real knowledge of the pottery of the past five thousand years can fail to feel in the factory products the dead hand of the machine, or to regret the price that has been paid for this marvel of universal, cheap, good quality crockery. For technical perfection is not beauty and there was much that was lovely in the older pottery which it is beyond the power of the factories to emulate.

The past fifty years have seen the rapid growth in many countries of an 'antidote' pottery—inspired primarily by the work of one or two men such as Bernard Leach, Shoji Hamada, Staite Murray and Michael Cardew, and made widely by men and women, often part-time amateurs, who deliberately return to the individual hand-techniques of the past in search of that elusive quality of beauty and delight which seems to wither in the mass-production of the factories.

Such are the pots in this Exhibition. Made by individual potters throughout New Zealand, they aim, not to mimic or rival the factory wares in the hardware stores—although, ironically, the factories are now mimicking these hand-made wares—but to complement them, to fill a gap, to re-state the worth of other types of ware and other ways of making them. The objective is not the technical perfection to which we have been conditioned, with its total mastery of material and method, its mathematically accurate shapes, its flawless surfaces and its repetitive uniformity. On the contrary. The marks of the potter's fingers or tools in the soft clay, the break-through into the glaze of 'impurities' in the clay, the rich roll of a thick glaze down the side of a pot, and in contrast, the rough feel and warm colour of the unglazed foot—all these are potential sources of delight and beauty and as such are welcomed and sought after.

But more than that—the pot that is made from beginning to end out of the skills and sensitivities of one man or woman, responding to the qualities of well-known and well-loved materials, can carry in its form and textures a quality of unity and personality that is completely lost in the factory and that belongs truly in the realm of the creative arts

Each pot here presented is such a personal creation and should be looked at as such.

At the same time it would be a mistake to assume that all such pottery is intended purely for the display shelf. The further these wares penetrate into our daily lives, in use in our homes, the more fully do they fulfil their true function. For a potter's creativeness flourishes best, not in the vacuum of 'self-expression', but in response to the needs and demands of the life of the people around him, and a pottery-sensitive people begets good potters.

So, in the trust that you will find them interesting and stimulating, we present the Fifth New Zealand Potters' Exhibition.
